

Summary of True Colors use in a School District in the US – kindly provided by:

Warren B. Hopkins, Ed.D. Deputy Superintendent
Arlington Public Schools, United States

Here is a short statement about True Colors in our School District:

True Colors has been an integral part of our schools for over eight years.

During that time, we have introduced the True Colors Personality Inventory to all our teachers, classified staff, and administrators. In fact, it has become an important part of the all our new employee orientations.

The immediate recognition people have with the personality types has not only developed a common language among our teachers and other employees, it has increased cooperation, collaboration, and team effectiveness at all our schools.

We have introduced our students to True Colors too. With some students as early as the fifth grade (11 year olds) and for all students in their Freshman year of high school (15 year olds). True colors is used to teach teamwork, coping skills, and communication techniques.

As a school district we believe True Colors helps students understand and find success with different types of teachers and the typical bureaucracy associated with any school system.

Students immediately understand differences and enjoy learning about themselves and their friends. It helps them be better students by teaching ways to understand and communicate with peers and their instructors.

Arlington School District is committed to using True Colors with all our students and employees to help foster understanding and higher levels of performance.
